The idea of using horses to plow dates back through centuries of agriculture. For Farmer Brown, this idea became practical in 1977, after he purchased his second draft horse. He began the plow shop with hopes that horse-drawn farming would become more popular and gain awareness as people grew more sensitive to the environment.

structural and operational patterns of John Deere, International and Oliver two way plows. Or it may be because White Horse had been building two way plows for several years. This unit features two bottoms engineered to operate separately. You set one down, plow the course and on the other end of the land you raise that bottom and engage the other bottom for the return down the same furrow.
